Adams Aviation is pleased to announce they are now a stocking distributor for the original all-urethane aircraft covering system by Superflite.

Since 1949, Superflite has been helping aircraft enthusiasts everywhere build and cover their personal aircraft and now has the new System 7. An all-urethane system, which is the most technologically advanced covering system in the world, System 7 has more durability, flexibility, and affordability than anything else on the market today.

"Where Superflite really stands out from the competition is with its actual coatings - the part that comes after the fabric covering" explained Stephen Gosling, Adams' CEO. "Superflite doesn't require a fabric filler or "silver" coats but instead combines those two steps into one with the fabric primer. So it's just three steps and four coats of product to cover and paint your 'plane whereas the competition requires an extra step, several extra coats, and much more sanding. Plus, in addition to the easy application and the high-gloss finish, a Superflite covering kit costs about 20% less than the major competition!"

Superflite manufactures everything you need to cover your aircraft - fabric, tapes, accessories, glue, primer, and paint - and it's all approved for use on certified aircraft. The Superflite STC covers almost every type of aircraft, and if an aircraft isn't on the list, then it can be added in a matter of weeks.

About Superflite

Superflite™

Superflite introduced the aviation community to the first all-urethane aircraft covering process. It was functional and long-lasting with a superior end result. Since that time, there have been upgrades, and with System 7, we have a system for every type of user in every type of climate. As you shop for your next aircraft covering project, consider Superflite for your fabric and finish. We have what you need to get the award-winning finish you want.
