

Walter Heine
Concorde Battery Corporation

Walter Heine retired after twenty years of service from the USAF in 1996. He joined the Concorde Battery Corporation in March 2016. Concorde Battery Corporation is a manufacturer of premium quality lead-acid batteries. Since 1979, Concorde Battery Corporation has manufactured aircraft batteries and batteries for shipboard use by the U.S. Military. Concorde Battery Corporation has provided the Department of Defense with over 150,000 military batteries manufactured to rigid quality requirements. Concorde is committed to the proposition that the customer deserves the best performing and highest quality product. Our batteries are tailored to the application rather than make the designer settle for what is available. It is this commitment to meeting customer needs that sets Concorde apart. In his current position, Walter is the General Sales Manager. He joined the ADMA Board in 2012.”
